Nagy Case Drives Wedge Between Tito, Kremlin

Break May Be Beyond Reconciliation

The case of the missing Imre Nagy may have widened the rift between the Kremlin and Yugoslavia's President Tito beyond the possibility of immediate reconciliation.

Tito's Brief Romance With Kremlin Once More Seems Headed For Rocks

The off-again, on-again Kremlin-Tito romance once more seems headed for the rocks. Tito never has denied his willingness to be a party of the first part in a Communist romance. But Moscow is proving to be a

The Yugoslav rift with Stalin was patched up only last Spring by Khrushchev, who proclaimed that it is possible for satellites to follow different roads to Communism.

That doctrine was reiterated time and again during the intervening months. But if June proved to be the month for Soviet diplomatic romance, then November has proved itself to be the time for disenchant-

In light of the trouble in the satellite nations. Moscow has started blasting Tito again. Pravda, the Communist Party's journalistic mouthpiece, says the Yugoslav dictator has been interfering in the affairs of other Communist parties and hints that he is to blame for the disturbances in Communist sphere countries.

And Russia is backing up this new round of charges with reported troop movements in the satellites, movements designed to harass Tito. Never one to be bluffed, Tito is meeting these by redeploying his own troops

What was Tito's "crime" this time?

He criticized Russia for its brutality in Hungary; he told the world there was a rift among Kremlin leaders about the de-Stalinization program; he openly pledged support to any satellite that wanted more freedom from Moscow domination.

These are the transgressions of Tito who, as far as the Kremlin is concerned, is speeding down his own road to Socialism so fast that he is encouraging others to do likewise. To Moscow, this is unpardonable.

Just Between Us

-By Bobby Westbrock

A four-day holiday is a pretty points of view. It's rather like a mile race in track, neither short enough to be taken at full speed like a dash, nor long enough to settle down to comfortable dog-

Four days is too long to keep up the estatic "My, I'm glad you're home. I'm cooking all your favorite food and tell me all the news" routine. The meals tend to deteriorate after three days and the news runs pretty thin, too.

But it's not long enough to have anybody feel they're part of the family again, to shake down into the routine, and start sharing new experiences, with many of us viewed the holiday was colored by the worry we before you have removed then felt about whether or not our favorite travellers were going to for a few seconds and they will reach their home ports safely, with the news from the traffic lanes anything but encouraging.

Once we hear they've arrived safely, we can start enjoying the holiday in retrospect. If there's time, that is, with a new holiday all set to pounce, but a longer

Meanwhile, we'll use this tagend week to catch up on the meetings and activities postponed because of Thanksgiving and be right in condition for the big race to Christmas,

MR. AND MRS. Dave Smith, who recently celebrated their 64th wedding anniversary, are pictured at their home in Newfoundland. They were married by Rev. Weidell, Evangelical minister, on Nov. 22, 1892. They have no children. Mrs. Smith was formerly Clara Waltz, Newfoundland. They operated the Paupack Valley Hotel in Newfoundland for 50 years.

Two New Recipes Of Events

Christmas Gifts From Your Kitchen

Some of the most welcome Chirstmas gifts are those that come from the kitchen - spicy fruit cakes and cookies gaily packaged, carrying with them all the hospitable traditions of the

If the container is part of the gift, it's better than ever. A fruit cake, for instance, can be baked in a decorative casserole which will be used long after the fruit is gone. Cookies may be packed in a gay apothecary jar, decorated with ribbon and Christmas tinsel, to do duty later as a kitchen canister or candy jar

One bright new idea is to pack a no-bake fruitcake into a wide kits containing sandwich box and acuum botile also make handome and practical containers for

each year, this is undoubtedly my favorite, because it brings me in William Faulstick, Mrs. John Fisher, chairman: Mrs. Gloria each year, this is undoubtedly my favorite, because it brings me in Kostenbader, Mrs. Rosa Butts, Fisher, Mrs. Patricia Reed, Mrs. closer contact with hundreds of people whom I might not ordinarily see, closer contact with hundreds of people whom I might not ordinarily see, Mrs. Rose Gower, Mrs. Ed. Young, Dorothy Smale and Miss Janet and because, whatever jaundiced mood I may have been in, it unfailingly arouses in me all the dormant goodness of thought and ideal without which there is no Christmas and no "anything else" worth mentioning

This year's experience was no exception. It had its moments of ander, Mrs. Anna Raseley and England, was established by King fun . . . its moments of pathos . . . but best of all, it brought its moments of awakening once again to the glorious warmth, color, and tenderness of the greatest of all holidays. Never before, in my memory at least, has Santa arrived on such a cold day. I was prepared for that, I thought, in my warmest wool dress, my shabby black boots, and my coat that weighs a ton. But after just a few minutes in the winds that lashed unmercifully across the Morey school playground, I had to ask ti someone in the crowd had a safety pin for my collar. My coat, you see, has a "jewel neckline," but there is a bit of trim I could draw up around my throat.

As I watched them, my heart was filled to overflowing with affection for the hundreds and hundreds of children clustered so eagerly against the ropes that kept them safely away from the clearing where Santa's helicopter would land. They were good children, eager but beautifully behaved . . , shivering but determined. Particularly did my heart ache for three little girls in summer weight jackets and dresses who were set upon seeing Santa even though the greater possibility was their turning into icicles first. I wiped the tears from their eyes and the drops from their noses, while I discussed their Santa wishes . . . but there was no way in which I could quiet their painful shivering. I do hope they kept their promise that as soon as they had seen Santa they would hurry home, and would talk with him another day in the warmth of our beautiful Wyckoff Toyland.

It seems to me that every year's Santa program is distinguished in some way from the others. One year, I remember, I was somewhat startled when one youngster said, "I know what I want for Christmax -a big rifle from J. J. Newberry." For a minute I was floored . then, rather lamely, I responded, "I imagine it's wonderful. We have some perfectly marvelous guns at Wyckoff's, too." It takes a bit more to throw me for a loss these days. Five years on the air have convinced me that when you ask a person, either child or adult, a question, you can expect almost anything. For instance, I would have been willing to bet my last $5.00 Friday that the adorable little girl in red who was just six years old and seemed as feminine as any little girl ever, would ask Santa for a doll. I hoped she would . . . because all the other youngsters were asking for modern toys, some of which were strange to me. But what did she want above all else? A SQUIRT GUN. And not to use on the boy next door , , , but to use on DADDY, because right now he's in the doghouse!

Oh, yesterday's broadcast was fun. In a way it was important, It marked Johnny Wells' debut as a helper. Johnny was there to help with the big wire from the studio that snaked its way across the field. threatening to trip anyone who wasn't wary. He was carrying a noisemaker from "Wyckie"-his grandfather and our store Papa-which he rattled happily over the air. Our 45 minutes marked the radio debut too, of Holt Wyckoff's John and Mike. 'The former baffled his father and myself by asking for some mysterious sounding object, which, long after, Holt discovered to be an Eldorado convertible car, from Wyckoff's Toyland. If only the miraculous sparkle of Johnny's bright, brown eyes could have gone over the air, there would have been no need for words. In the very sweetness and excitement of this tot's face, were all the beauty and magic of Christmas,

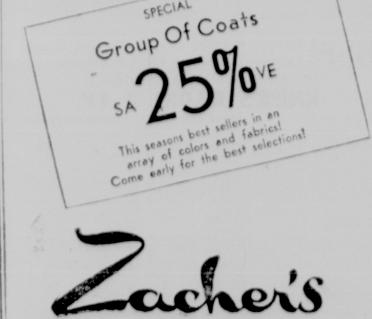

Then there was Johnny Miller (Bob and Ira's son) who has a list of Christmas wishes as long as your arm and would have read the letter on the program had there been time . . . and Mary Scheller's Stevie who kept shouting "Santa, Santa" from the throng until I edged my way to him. What did you wish to tell Santa, Stevie?" I asked, knowing the

"I want him to throw away the key . . . to throw away the key. We've changed houses since he was here last year, and I want him to throw away the old key."

What is your new address?" I asked. "I don't remember," Stevie shouted with a look of worry furrowing brow. "I only know I want him to throw away the old key." Stevie needn't worry, I'm sure. Santa isn't half so much cor with keys to front doors as he is with the key to men's hearts-the key
